Why Are Some Features Grayed Out in Translated Articles?

When you use the Google Translate tool on Britannica Library, some features—like Cite, Save, Send, and Read-Aloud—may be disabled. This is because the translated version is generated by Google, not Britannica.

Citing & Saving

These tools work with Britannica's original content, but since Google generates the translation, citations and saved versions would not reflect the translated text.

Sending Articles

When sharing an article, only the original English version is available to avoid confusion.

Read-Aloud

This feature reads Britannica's original content and does not support the translated text.

Printing

While Britannica does not generate a formatted print page for translations, you may be able to print using your browser's print function.
